

WOMEN OF THE DAY.

A New York Heiress About to Marry
a German Baron Secures Her
Property to Herself.

CONCEITED HUSBANDS.

Countess Waldersee, an American
Who Has Great Power in Germany—A Fable for Young Wives.

New York Herald: Baron Clement Zedlitz, an officer in the German army, will soon lead to the altar an American heiress and beauty, Miss Cornelia Carnochan Roosevelt, of this city. Miss Roosevelt is the daughter of Charles Y. Roosevelt, who died in 1893, and a grand-daughter of the late James I. Roosevelt, who was for many years a judge of the supreme court of this city. Miss Roosevelt has spent much of her time abroad. She met the baron in Paris and there he wooed and won her. She speaks German and several other languages, and that made matters easier for the baron, whose English is somewhat broken. But Miss Roosevelt is a ward in chancery, and being only nineteen years of age she is, in the eyes of the law, still an infant. Therefore in order to avoid possible legal complications with regard to her property the sanction of the courts here had to be obtained to the marriage.

Under the laws of Germany a wife's estate becomes the property of her husband. The baron is a chivalrous gentleman and does not wish people to think that he is seeking Miss Roosevelt for her money. Therefore he suggested that an ante-nuptial contract should be drawn up by which she would retain control of her property after marriage. This proposition met with the approval of Miss Roosevelt and her mother, Mrs. Cornelia I. Roosevelt, who is her guardian.

The matter came up before Judge O'Brien yesterday in the supreme court special term. George H. Yeaman represented Mrs. Roosevelt, Edward T. Warfield appeared for the baron, Messrs. Jones and Roosevelt represented the guardians of the estate, and Ex-Judge Charles A. Peabody was present as guardian of item of the infant, Miss Roosevelt. The baron himself was also present.

It was stated that Miss Roosevelt had accepted the offer of marriage from the baron providing that before the wedding he entered into an agreement with her and certain trustees, by which he would renounce any right he might otherwise acquire to her property under the laws of Germany, where the couple expect to reside.

Then an accounting was given of Miss Roosevelt's financial affairs from which it appears that her personality in the hands of the guardians of her estate, Alfred Roosevelt and William E. Roosevelt, amounted, in April, 1897, to $259,358. Besides this she has a sixth interest in an estate valued at $100,000. Her net income from all sources amounts to about $18,000 a year.

It was necessary in order to satisfy all legal requirements that the court should be fully informed about the baron's mental condition. Frederick Roosevelt, Jr., Horace C. Duval and Mr. Yeaman gave testimony to show that she was a highly accomplished young lady of sound understanding, and although legally an infant, she fully appreciated the importance of the step she was about to take, and desired that her property should be held in trust for herself after her marriage.

Next was considered a very important item—the young lady's wedding outfit. It was stated that the proposed marriage seemed to him to be entirely satisfactory, and he signed the findings in accordance with the testimony. Everybody shook hands with everybody, and the baron looked particularly happy.

He is a handsome man, thirty years of age, tall, well built, and with the erect carriage of a man who has undergone martial training. He has a light mustache and curly hair, and a single eye which is quite as much skill as was shown by Joseph Chamberlain when he visited this country. He has an estate in Silesia and is said to be fairly well off for a German baron.

The wedding will take place at Grace church about the end of this month. The baron will wear his uniform. This is at the request of Miss Roosevelt, who wished her friends to see her in a handsome uniform. To make this possible he had to get the consent of Emperor William. This was at first refused, but the emperor on learning how much Miss Roosevelt was interested in the matter relented and graciously consented.

It is a gorgeous uniform. Speaking of it recently to a friend the baron said: "It is trimmed with fur of ze leetle American monkey called ze chinchilla."

The baron does not know as much about natural history as he does about war.

CONCEITED HUSBANDS.
Toronto Globe: We have read scores of articles on the Anglo-American marriage epidemic. In every one of them the writer has striven to reach a solution by inquiring: Why should the rich and titled Englishman fly from the maidens of his own native land and seek a wife on the other shore of the Atlantic?

As long as the question is approached from that side the true answer will be sought in vain. This writer may prove that it is because American girls are the prettier; that one will demonstrate that it is because American papas come down handsomely; a third will say that it is because the American girl is more stylish, independent, better informed, etc. None of these answers will cause any one to change his opinion.

All who have written on the question have approached it from the wrong side. The real question is, not why Englishmen marry American girls, but why American girls marry Englishmen. With the question stated correctly, the answer is not far to seek.

In the first place the American girl is in active rebellion against the American man because the latter has set himself up as the perfect husband. We have our doubts whether any daughter of Eve would willingly marry a man whom she thought to be perfection—there is no doubt whatever that she would not marry a man who sets himself up as the best possible husband, and that is what the American man is constantly doing through his representative press. In our journalistic experience we have read many hundred times in American newspapers and magazines that American men are not only the best husbands but that they are models which men of other nations may aim to reach, but which they never will. It requires no great knowledge of woman-kind to tell us the "why" of it. It is revolts at the idea of marrying a monster of perfection. The American man has, in a word, overdone the business of self-puffery. The rich American girl, having a mind of her own, constitutes herself the judge of the relative desirableness of husbands and she seems to be more and more frequently coming to the conclusion that the Englishman, professing to be only flesh and blood and a good deal of each, is a more satisfactory partner for life than is the perfect American.

The American girl can find plenty of support for her opinions by simply observing what passes around her. She sees American young men, wholly given up to imitation of Englishmen—principally as respects their vices and defects. She finds that a young man with six generations of American ancestry behind him can be made happy for a week by the suggestion that she has mistaken him for an Englishman. Naturally she comes to the conclusion that the Englishman whom her countryman almost worships must be the superior being. The choice seems to be on the strength of the American man's own judgment, to be one between gold and pinhead. Having traveled thus far by means of her reasoning powers, she proceeds to apply her knowledge to practice. When she meets an eligible Englishman she waves a flag to him. He of course capitulates. With such marvelous art is the affair managed that to the end of his life he remains under the delusion that he was the captor and she the surrendering party.

A POWER BEHIND THE THRONE.

St. Louis Republic: Countess Waldersee, nee Lee, the daughter of a New York grocer, is becoming recognized as the power behind the German throne. The wife of Gen. Waldersee, the successor of Count Moltke as chief of staff of the German army, she wields an overshadowing influence over the young emperor. She is a matronly looking woman of great piety, and a born politician, who years ago became an expert in court intrigue and the crooked ways of diplomacy to such a degree that even Bismarck, who detests women in politics, is now forced to recognize her as a co-ordinate power. If the life of William II. should be spared until Bismarck shall have entered Walhalla, the Countess Waldersee undoubtedly will shape the destinies of the German empire, as the grocer's daughter who would wield an iron rod over the warrior spouse, not only in matters domestic, but also in those of a political nature. At present she is charged with match-making, since the Bismarck affair, a business not in the best repute in the circles of the Iron Chancellor. The betrothal of Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg, the sister of the reigning empress, to Prince Leopold of Prussia, son of the Red Prince, is said to have been brought about by Countess Waldersee. The bridegroom has traveled around the world and about a year ago he visited the principal cities of the United States. He was then noted only for his overbearing demeanor and the studious habit in exploring the mysteries of certain art galleries. Countess Waldersee is a great aunt of the princess. Miss Lee was married Nov. 4, 1894, in Paris, to Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg, an uncle of the present bride. Before her marriage Miss Lee was created Princess de Suer, by the emperor of Austria. Her first husband died in Beirut, Syria, on July 2, 1895.

A FABLE FOR YOUNG WIVES.

Prof. Blackie in Cassell's Magazine: Men are naturally less amiable and more intractable than women. The first point, therefore, to secure a married woman's happiness after the holidays of the honeymoon are over, is that she should study carefully the peculiarities of her husband's temper. It is in the power of a wise and good woman to make a lamb of the greatest bear that ever wore whiskers; while by a foolish treatment the process may be reversed, and a generous bearded creature, with all the capabilities of a lion, may end in being a bear of a wolf. A wife must tread on her husband's temper first as cautiously as a prudent fox does upon recently formed ice. Only when she has learned where the slippery humor of her husband will bear, and where it will break, can she perform with safety those graceful evolutions by which a devoted wife achieves triumph triumph triumph. Bonaparte did by his artillery. Wise old Pizarro, descending on the topic, very appropriately brings in the old fable of the traveler, whom Boreas, with his obnoxious blasts, tried to dislodge of his good great coat; but the result was quite otherwise; the more violently the Boreas puffed his cheeks, the more closely the man wrapped his coat about him. But what Boreas could not achieve with all his strength the sun did with a few slight touches of his genial beams. The man was so overcome by the softening influence that he hung both cloak and tunic away. So let no woman foolishly attempt to gain from her husband in a rough way what she can surely achieve by gentleness.

ROSALIND FOR A FANCY BALL.

London Queen: I could hardly suggest for a fancy ball two more beautiful dresses than those worn by Mrs. Lancaster as Rosalind in the recent reproduction of "As You Like It" at the Shaftsbury theater. One was a satin of a faint pure tone of pink, hand embroidered with peacocks' feathers, formed of an applique of several of green velvet, with gold thread. The long, close fitting bodice was also richly embroidered and square cut, coming well down the hips, and showing an elaborate habit with fine gold insertion. The very full skirt was caught up on one side by a jeweled girdle. The sleeves were tied with a triple cord and fell from the elbow, with close fitting ones beneath. A jeweled dagger was attached to the side and also a bag pocket of satin with three gold tassels. The other gown was a pale peach satin, the full plain skirt covered with jewels and embroidery, 1,500 gem beads introduced upon it. The bodice was moulded to the figure and apparently made of gold network, bordered with jeweled bands. A train of plum and peach velvet fell from the shoulder. The draping in both these dresses was so deftly contrived that the actress, who was rather below than above the ordinary height, appeared to be a tall woman.

RICH WOMEN OF NEW YORK.

Miss Davis, a daughter of John W. Davis, has $2,000,000.
Miss Mary Callender is an orphan of 25 years and with $2,000,000.
